

MAKE WAITRESS "GOAT"

Nora Haubenschild, a union waitress, got a job at Philip Henrici's restaurant, Randolph st. A customer asked Nora to bring her "glazed sweet potatoes." Nora brought the potatoes. "These are fried, not glazed," said the customer. Nora went back and got the "glazed potatoes."

Then the Henrici management docked Nora 15 cents off her wages. They threw the fried potatoes back in the pan and served them to another customer.

Nora had $2 coming for two days' work, she thought. Henrici offered her $1.85. She wouldn't take it.

Elizabeth Maloney, secretary of the waitresses' union, wrote the Legal Aid society about it. Maud P. Boyes, superintendent, wrote back, saying Henrici was entirely "within his rights in the matter."

Miss Maloney says the Legal Aid society does not know its business. "We know there are court decisions on the point. The supreme court of Illinois has decided that waitresses do not have to pay for stuff refused by customers."
